FBI PROBE BRINGS CHARGES AGAINST 3 TRUMP EX-AIDES

Ex-foreign adviser cooperates with prosecutors

■ Paul Manafort led an opulent life, feds say. A3

WASHINGTON — The special counsel investigating Russia's role in the 2016 presidential race announced criminal charges Monday against three former campaign aides to Donald Trump, including his former campaign manager, marking a new phase in the FBI probe of the president's inner circle.

One of the three repeatedly sought to arrange a meeting between then-candidate Trump and senior Russian officials in London or Moscow, according to court documents.

The meeting did not take place,

Zach Kauffman stands behind the square wooden bar at a high-end restaurant in Mount Dora. His gray-blue shirt is buttoned up, reddish hair slicked to the side and beard perfectly trimmed.

A customer gives him a once-over before the two share quips and laughs about Kauffman getting "his ears lowered."

Little did the diner at 1921 by Norman Van Aken know that the transformation went beyond a haircut.

Just a few hours earlier, Kauffman wore jeans, a green T-shirt that had seen better days and a baseball cap that he regularly pulled off to run his fingers

Dyer seeks re-election, not UCF presidency

Orlando mayor loves 'best job in America'

BY JEFF WEINER
Staff Writer

Buddy Dyer won't seek to become the University of Central Florida's next president, opting instead to run for another term as Orlando's mayor in 2019.

Dyer, who has previously expressed an interest in the UCF presidency, said Monday he was caught "a little bit off-guard" when UCF President John Hitt a week ago revealed his plans to retire June 30. Dyer said he has since received a flood of calls and messages about his future.

Dyer

"I love this job, and I tell everybody every day that I have the best job in America and I'm the happiest mayor in America," said Dyer in an exclusive interview with the Orlando Sentinel.

Dyer, 59, cited major projects not yet complete as factors in his decision to stay put, including the Creative Village, the final phase of the Dr. Phillips Center for the Performing Arts and a SunRail extension to Orlando International Airport.

"I truly enjoy this position," he said. "It's rewarding, and I like the positive-leadership aspect and the things that

Transgender military service wins court OK

BY W.J. HENNIGAN
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A federal court in Washington has blocked President Donald Trump's directive that prohibited transgender people from serving in the U.S. military, a significant setback to the White House, although it continued to block use of federal funds for gender reassignment surgery for military personnel.

U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's ruling Monday restored the Obama-era policy allowing transgender troops to serve openly in the armed forces. The ruling comes three months after Trump first used social media to declare them banned from military service.

"As far as the court is aware at this preliminary stage, all of the reasons proffered by the president for excluding transgender individ-

Orlando drawing national chains to expanding co-working market

BY PAUL BRINKMANN | Staff Writer

When Steven Jones started his own digital marketing company in January, he wanted to continue working in downtown Orlando.

But without a big budget, he couldn't afford to lease an office, so he rented out a desk at Catalyst co-working space, two floors above his former employer.

"It was nice coming to work in the same building," said Jones, 32, founder of Rise Inc. "I still walk to work, and I'm surrounded by like-minded creative talent."

Downtown Orlando's co-working market is maturing, offering many options for a new way to work — sharing common spaces, meeting rooms, technology and coffee bars, while networking with other tenants for sales and referrals on a casual, daily basis. National chains are
